

The Layerist Workshops

All thought and all spoken words as well as all forms of audio/visual communication are used to facilitate understandings and agreements between people. The degree of value that these understandings and agreements achieve are measured by how much they serve to satisfy a personal intimacy of self with others.

There is no such thing as “TRUTH” when past experience is translated into words or any form of audio/visual language. Truth can only exist within one single present moment of “time”. Any impression or echo of this truth can only be recognized and understood through a clarity that can only come from a person’s sensory driven view within that one single moment of its existence. The recognition and understanding of that “truth” becomes an instance of memory which is shaped by a consensus of agreement between self, others around you and other experiences or people from your past. This is a process of altering the actual truth that begins during its original present moment of existence and is then compounded with additional alterations from past or historical moments of experience. That consensus of agreement by self and others will be placed into memory along with recall oriented words and images with the intent of ensuring some form of accuracy when that memory is used to influence future moments of “time”.

All thoughts, words and audio/visual forms of communication between people are based on a limitless number of memories, beliefs, desires, judgements, theories and assumptions. For that reason they will be prejudiced and subjectively altered when expressed through any form of audio/visual communication to strategically serve the person or persons they represent.

I am about to use all of my thoughts, words and audio/visual communication to demystify thoughts, words and audio/visual communication. I do this to point you in a direction that can help you to clearly see, hear and understand the truth with as much accuracy as possible during and after each present moment of “time”. This clarity will also help you to know your true-self. Clarity and consensus are the two most important needs for these workshops to work for you.

WARNING:

If you listen to or read and understand what I say in these workshops; if you agree with what I teach you and adapt it into your lives - you will never be the same again! If you buy into what I am showing you - there is no going back to how it was before you take these workshops. But that will happen even if you do not listen; even if you do not understand or agree, and even if you leave/stop this very second. This may not make sense to you as you arrive/start - but it will if you stay/continue.
